

Inverted Commas

For each passage below, add in the missing inverted commas.

I don't think, said Natalie, I can make the meeting. I have a dental appointment tomorrow at ten.

I'll come over now, said Rob, as I am free. I can't stay long though.

Come near the fire, said Abi, and warm up. It is so cold out there.

Come on, she said crossly, or you're going to make us late! We need to leave now.

It's my birthday today, laughed Mollie, and I'm having a party. I hope you can make it.

Today, announced the teacher, we are going to carry out some maths investigations. Please get into groups of four.

Dad has gone to work, explained Mum, but he'll be back this evening. Now, please help me tidy up.

I am so hungry, moaned Richie, that I could eat three dinners! When are we going to eat?

I'll meet you in ten minutes, said Cathy, outside the cafe. I've just got to go to the bank beforehand.

I left my keys here, said Debbie, but I can't seem to find them now. Have you seen them anywhere?

I can't come tonight, said Joe, as I have too much work to do. If I finish it, I'll catch up with you tomorrow.

I thought, said Alison, that you might like this. I saw it and thought it would suit you.

Inverted Commas

For each passage below, add in the missing inverted commas.

“I don’t think,” said Natalie, “I can make the meeting. I have a dental appointment tomorrow at ten.”

“I’ll come over now,” said Rob, “as I am free. I can’t stay long though.”

“Come near the fire,” said Abi, “and warm up. It is so cold out there.”

“Come on,” she said crossly, “or you’re going to make us late! We need to leave now.”

“It’s my birthday today,” laughed Mollie, “and I’m having a party. I hope you can make it.”

“Today,” announced the teacher, “we are going to carry out some maths investigations. Please get into groups of four.”

“Dad has gone to work,” explained Mum, “but he’ll be back this evening. Now, please help me tidy up.”

“I am so hungry,” moaned Richie, “that I could eat three dinners! When are we going to eat?”

“I’ll meet you in ten minutes,” said Cathy, “outside the cafe. I’ve just got to go to the bank beforehand.”

“I left my keys here,” said Debbie, “but I can’t seem to find them now. Have you seen them anywhere?”

“I can’t come tonight,” said Joe, “as I have too much work to do. If I finish it, I’ll catch up with you tomorrow.”

“I thought,” said Alison, “that you might like this. I saw it and thought it would suit you.”

Inverted Commas

For each passage below, add in the missing inverted commas.

I think, said Jenna, that the museum is near the library. Take the next turning on the left and you can't miss it.

Get up, Mark's mum shouted, or you will be late for school! Your brother is dressed already.

Julie, asked Mum, please could you get some bread from the shop? We have none left and I need to make lunch.

Can I ask, inquired Ben, where you bought that top? I think I would like one too.

Do you think, asked Jordan, that we should catch this bus? I am sure this takes us to the swimming baths.

I stayed up late, said Michael, to finish reading my book. It was just too good to put down!

Hurry up, said Freddie, or we shall miss the train! It leaves in five minutes.

My name, the boy said, is David. I am ten years old and enjoy swimming.

Call me later, said Graham, when you get home. I want to make sure you arrive back safely.

He's over there, pointed Dan, near to the swings. Let's go over and see him.

Please, asked Imran, could you pass the ketchup? I like it with my chips.

We will arrive after six, explained Mr Green, on the Manchester train. We should be with you by seven.

Inverted Commas

For each passage below, add in the missing inverted commas.

“I think,” said Jenna, “that the museum is near the library. Take the next turning on the left and you can’t miss it.”

“Get up,” Mark’s mum shouted, “or you will be late for school! Your brother is dressed already.”

“Julie,” asked Mum, “please could you get some bread from the shop? We have none left and I need to make lunch.”

“Can I ask,” inquired Ben, “where you bought that top? I think I would like one too.”

“Do you think,” asked Jordan, “that we should catch this bus? I am sure this takes us to the swimming baths.”

“I stayed up late,” said Michael, “to finish reading my book. It was just too good to put down!”

“Hurry up,” said Freddie, “or we shall miss the train! It leaves in five minutes.”

“My name,” the boy said, “is David. I am ten years old and enjoy swimming.”

“Call me later,” said Graham, “when you get home. I want to make sure you arrive back safely.”

“He’s over there,” pointed Dan, “near to the swings. Let’s go over and see him.”

“Please,” asked Imran, “could you pass the ketchup? I like it with my chips.”

“We will arrive after six,” explained Mr Green, “on the Manchester train. We should be with you by seven.”